Dear Valued Members,

As you read the January/February 2015 issue of Corrections Today, you'll notice some changes to the look and feel of the magazine. We know our members are always striving to stay on the cutting edge of the corrections field, and as such, we want to make Corrections Today as modern and dynamic as you are. Starting with this issue, and continuing throughout 2015, you'll notice changes to the design and content that will improve overall readability and expediency.

ACA is only as strong as our membership, and it is our goal to reflect that in this publication — a magazine for members, by members. Consider this magazine your forum to communicate best practices and programs with your fellow corrections professionals across the country. We are always looking for articles that reflect positive innovations in the corrections field. I encourage you to submit an article about the good things happening in your facility, and ACA’s periodicals staff is always available to help tell your story. For information about how to submit an article, see page 55 in this issue, or email submissions@aca.org.

As we continue to improve Corrections Today for the benefit of our members, please feel free to reach out to us. Our continued partnership encourages us to work hard on your behalf.

Sincerely,

James A. Gondles, Jr., CAE
Executive Director
American Correctional Association

All content and images are copyrighted by ACA, 2015, and may not be reprinted, altered, copied, transmitted or used in any way without written permission.